

Mental Health and Wellbeing Support in the Mallee Track Region

Over the last year an increasing number of people are reporting feeling worried, fearful, anxious or uncertain. These feelings are often normal responses to stressful situations such as the COVID-19 pandemic and usually get better over time.

But sometimes negative feelings can get a bit too much or go on for longer than they should, so it's good to be aware of these signs and symptoms in yourself and those close to you.

EARLY SIGNS

Feeling:

- overwhelmed
- sad or moody
- tired
- fearful or worried about the safety of yourself or others

Symptoms:

- Having vivid or distressing dreams
- Being unusually irritable or angry and/or restless and fidgety
- Working too much or too little

WHEN TO REACH OUT FOR HELP?

When these signs, feelings, thoughts or behaviours have gone on for more than two weeks and are beginning to impact your day-to-day life. These might include:

- Loss of interest in activities that are normally enjoyed
- Avoiding others such as withdrawing from social networks, work or family
- Behaving out of character
- Feeling overwhelmed by tasks that would normally be done easily
- Being unable to concentrate
- Having increased concern for physical health issues including for the physical health of babies if a new parent

- Regularly feeling sick and run down
- Experiencing changes in sleep patterns, sleeping too much or too little
- Changes in appetite (losing or gaining weight)
- Increasing use of alcohol, cigarettes and/or drugs

If this sounds like you or someone close to you then it's time to get in touch with someone who can help. There are many ways to do this, and you can see some of the options available below.

Whatever option you choose, just remember that there is no shame in asking for help to support your mental health. One in five Australians will need this support at some time in their lives. You are not alone and with help you or someone you love will feel better.
